ODFW Commission
Salem, OR

Dear Chair Levy and Commissioners:

As a resident of Wallowa County, a member of the Wallowa County Wolf Compensation Committee and a co-founder of NE Oregon Ecosystems, I urge you to reject any requests to make detailed locations of wolves, or any other species, available to members of the public.

Existing arrangements to notify livestock producers when collared wolves are detected within the general area (by polygon) where their livestock are located are sufficient to allow deployment of human presence and nonlethal deterrents to protect stock.

Considering the public and candid desire of some elements of the ranching and hunting communities to reduce or eliminate Oregon's wolves, I believe providing specific locations would:

1. Allow the identification of den and rendezvous sites, possibly leading to harassment, intentional or otherwise, or illegal killing of wolves.
2. Allow the location of habitual trails and routes used by wolves, making them vulnerable to harassment or poaching.
3. Establish a precedent for other species, leading to widening use of telemetry locations for purposes other than scientific or management purposes.
4. Be the first time to my knowledge that any state wildlife agency has intentionally provided such information for public consumption.
5. Encourage some members of the public to violate existing law by harassing, injuring or illegally killing wolves.
6. Lead to disruption of a pack's social structure by enabling oppressive human presence, leading to possible pack dispersion, migration and/or conflict with other packs resulting in wolf mortality.
7. Lead to an increase in directly human-caused wolf mortality, endangering the growth and viability of Oregon's nascent wolf population.
8. Give the impression that the ODFW was enabling persecution of wolves.
9. Trigger litigation.

Wolf/livestock conflicts are few in light of the tens of thousands of cattle and sheep among which wolves are immersed. Wallowa County alone has more than 35,000 cattle in an average year on the range, and some cattle regularly favor locations on public grazing allotments within a few hundred yards of wolf den sites, and salt blocks are located within a ¼ mile of den and rendezvous sites, yet years have gone by when no attacks on these cattle have occurred.

Hunting interests that continue to call for more aggressive wolf management (and lethal management of other predators) ignore the data that shows that although wolves may limit ungulate overpopulation (to the advantage of ranchers who suffer from surging elk numbers on private and public range), they do not reduce hunting opportunities. Of the six hunting units within Wallowa County, five are above elk population goals, several near or greater than 100% over goals, and these are in wolf territories which have been occupied for as long as five years. On the Zumwalt Prairie, an area occupied by wolves since 2009, elk are being culled by special hunts at the request of ranchers, while at the same time the ranchers are calling for more lethal wolf management. It would be sensible here to allow the wolves to do their job and naturally govern the size of the Zumwalt elk herd.

There are no reasons to risk Oregon's vulnerable wolf population by providing detailed location data or by altering management procedures in favor of lethal action, as has been proposed by some livestock interests.

Sincerely,

Walter H. Sykes

Chair Levy & Commissioners,

Oregon Wild represents over 14,000 members and supporters across the state who support our mission to protect and restore Oregon's wildlands, wildlife, and waters as an enduring legacy for future generations.

Just one year after a landmark settlement agreement between the State of Oregon, conservationists, and the livestock industry, ODFW is set to undertake several tasks that will be extremely consequential for wolf recovery. Recent polling shows that Oregonians continue to be overwhelmingly in favor of wolf conservation and recovery. Evidence on the ground indicates that the compromise approach of the Oregon wolf settlement is helping to reduce conflict. As an agency that serves all Oregonians, we urge ODFW to take a cautious, conservative approach to any changes in wolf conservation policies, and fully embrace the agency's broad mission to "protect and enhance Oregon's fish and wildlife and their habitats for use and enjoyment by present and future generations" by prioritizing conservation, education, transparency, science, and non-lethal management.

We reiterate our serious and growing concerns about ongoing abuse of the ODFW program of publicly releasing wolf location data. We strongly oppose expanding the program by providing specific location data as requested by Todd Nash, Rod Childers, and other representatives of the Oregon Cattlemen's Association.

ODFW is required to initiate a 5-year review of the Wolf Conservation & Management Plan in 2015, and expected wolf population figures will likely trigger a status review of wolves. Below in greater detail, we

- Recommend undertaking the status review only after reviewing the Wolf Plan on which it relies. Future population trends are highly dependent on the conservation policies that will be required under an updated plan.
- Highlight that under the Wolf Plan, four breeding pairs of wolves for three consecutive years is an event that triggers a status review. It is not a population recovery goal nor is it a trigger for delisting.
- Suggest the agency maintain a cautious approach in its review of the recently adopted Wolf Plan.

Status Review

Barring unexpected incidents of poaching, disease, or other mortality, it is likely that there will be at least 4 breeding pairs of wolves in Eastern Oregon for the 3rd consecutive year in early 2015. If confirmed, that event triggers a status review of wolves in Oregon and consideration of a move to Phase II of management in that part of the state.

It is not and has never been an end point recovery threshold, nor is it a trigger for removing state Endangered Species Protections.

Though expanding in number, wolves remain almost exclusively confined to the Northeast corner of the state. Though moving in the right direction, we are skeptical that the current estimates of 64 wolves in Oregon represent anything approaching a meaningful, sustainable, or ecologically functional population. Few biologists would argue that 64 individual animals constitutes a recovered population of any species.

However, as part of the 2005 Wolf Plan compromise, responsible parties accepted a review of the wolf's status upon achieving this number. The plan proposes a review process. It does not endorse a predetermined decision. The plan requires this process to be rigorous, science-based, public, and transparent.

Wolf Plan Review

The current iteration of the Oregon Wolf Conservation & Management Plan was codified just last summer. It is the result of exhaustive negotiations and was endorsed by the Commission, Governor, Legislature, Oregon Cattlemen's Association, and several conservation organizations. Upon his retirement announcement a few weeks ago, Director Elicker cited the settlement and the resulting wolf conservation and management plan as the singular achievement of which he was most proud during his tenure with ODFW.

The original plan was written in 2005 after an exhaustive public process that included stakeholders from biologists and hunters to the conservation community, livestock industry, and general public. It was supported by nearly all parties, but opposed by the Oregon Cattlemen's Association. In 2010, two years after wolves returned to Oregon, the plan underwent its first 5-year review. The plan received over 20,000 public comments with over 90% in favor of stronger protections. Despite the overwhelming public support for wolf conservation and recovery, the plan was substantively weakened. Those changes, coupled with ambiguity in the plan and regarding ODFW's authority to kill wolves, led to legal conflict that was ultimately resolved in 2013.

The 2013 settlement agreement and Oregon's current wolf plan is not perfect. It includes significant concessions and compromises from all sides – including conservation organizations agreeing to allow an endangered species to be killed to assuage a private industry. However it is better than nearly any other state in balancing legitimate concerns of livestock operators, conservation values, and science against old prejudices that fuel a desire to simply trap, poison, and shoot wolves. The settlement adopted last summer increased transparency and reduced ambiguity, allowing all parties to have a clearer understanding of the rules and a greater level of trust for ODFW and its decision making.

In the coming months, some interests will want to dramatically rewrite the plan because they did not get everything they want. However given the newness of these rules, the compromises they embody, and their success so far, we urge the Commission not to entertain such changes. Oregon's wolf plan is working well compared the other states, The last thing Oregon needs is to take a step towards the kind of bitter conflict and acrimony driven by bloody wolf killing practices of Idaho or Wyoming.

Process

If the agency cannot undertake both processes simultaneously, we suggest that all stakeholders would be far better served by the Commission first undertaking the Wolf Plan review. In addition to being far more contentious and polarizing, the status review must consider adequacy of regulatory mechanisms of which the Wolf Plan is a major component. Making an informed decision as to whether or not to continue endangered species protection for Oregon's wolves without knowing what management framework will exist for their conservation is impossible.

When it comes to ensuring wolf recovery while addressing the legitimate concerns of livestock interests, Oregon is on the right track. But we have a long way to go. In the coming year, the Commission can keep us heading in the right direction by rejecting divisive and extreme proposals to abandon the terms of the landmark 2013 wolf settlement or prematurely stripping endangered species protections from Oregon's wolves.

Sincerely,

Steve Pedery

Dear Bobby,

Attached please find our letter regarding the recent request to release specific wolf location data. Please distribute this letter to the entire commission. In addition, are you accepting oral testimony at your next meeting? If so, we'll see if we can have an ORTWS member in attendance.

Thank you for your consideration and please feel free to contact me with any questions.

Dear Commissioners:

The Oregon Chapter of the Wildlife Society is an organization of professional biologists, land managers, scientists, and others interested in wildlife issues that promote the conservation and wise management of natural resources in Oregon. Part of our mission is to educate and inform the public on topics important to the conservation of natural resources and to promote decision-making with science-based information.

At the September 5th Fish and Wildlife Commission meeting in Joseph, Oregon, representatives for the Oregon Cattlemen's Association requested that ODFW provide livestock owners with specific telemetry location data for wolves. We believe the release of this data is not only inconsistent with ODFW's mandate to manage wolves effectively in the state of Oregon, it is contrary to professionally accepted procedures for how telemetry data are managed. Telemetry is a tool used by wildlife professionals for two general purposes; research and monitoring. The location data generated from this technology is collected for specific purposes intended to increase our knowledge or to improve our ability to manage. There are numerous ways these data can be misused or used by individuals for personal gain, which are counter to wise and ethical wildlife management.

Data from individual animals in scientific studies are not provided to specific user groups or the general public because the "raw data" need to be analyzed to allow proper interpretation of the results; information (e.g., raptor nest sites, threatened and endangered species locations, radio-collared wildlife) may be "sensitive" and release of such information could lead to inadvertent (e.g., enthusiastic wildlife observers) or intentional (e.g., poachers) harm to the animals of interest. Furthermore, the release of specific location data could set a dangerous precedent by establishing an expectation that telemetry data can be made available to the general public for a variety of uses.

For example, the ODFW raffles and auctions big game hunting tags each year that generate large amounts of money and public interest. If telemetry data are provided to one special interest group for one species, this opens the door for raffle or auction tag winners to request similar data for the species they are pursuing. The use of telemetry data for hunting is counter to the fair chase doctrine that is fundamentally important to ethical hunters and anglers.

For the above reasons, principal investigators of a study or managers responsible for these data must limit the review of raw data to those professionals needed to accomplish the objectives of their work. In conclusion, the ORTWS recommends that the Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission does not provide the location-specific telemetry data for wolves (or any other species) in Oregon.

Respectfully,

Dear ODFW Commission,

The Pacific Wolf Coalition is a coalition of over 30 groups representing over one million members in Oregon and across the country. We have a shared vision of significant and sustainable populations of wolves restored across their historic habitats in Washington, Oregon, and California, filling their critical roles in nature, and providing hope and inspiration to communities across the region.

The agency is set to embark on a number of important public processes including the mandated review of the Oregon Wolf Conservation and Management Plan. We - and our member organizations - look forward to being involved as constructive partners in the process.

Sincerely,

You've only to look at the far reaching changes to the Yellowstone ecosystem to recognize the benefits outweigh the negatives of having a healthy wolf population in California. Please include this citizen's comments as being for the wolf, not against him in your public commentary tally.

After calling Curt's office, it was suggested that the best thing to do with the ODFW messages would be to send them to the Commission address. It's our hope that in doing so we aren't unnecessarily burdening Teri, but also want to be sure that Curt is able to give them an appropriate level of attention. Brett, we'll likely have them go through the usual channels at the Governor's office.

If you'd prefer they go to a different address, please let me know as soon as possible.

I assume you've read our recent letters on the upcoming processes and the collaring proposal from the OCA. It is our sincere hope that we can continue to work constructively on wolf recovery going forward. In that spirit, I am happy to speak with either of you about this and other issues at any time.

Dear Chair Levy and Commissioners Finley, Wolley, Anderson, Webber, and Akenson,

I am writing as both as a private, tax-paying citizen and as a scientist to strongly oppose the request by the Oregon Cattlemen's Association to have ODFW provide them specific telemetry location data for wolves.

As the public we have invested countless public dollars to restore wolves and assist in reducing conflicts between livestock and wolves and have shown over and over again that we support the return of wolves to the West. I live in Baker County, over on the East side and I am well versed in the discussions regarding wolves and livestock. I know first hand the continued resistant of many livestock producers to wolves. As such I am concerned that the use of specific location data would be misused, if not by the ranchers themselves, by others who support their attitudes.

As a member of the public, I wish that we didn't track the wolves to the extent that we do. I know that the effort into constant monitoring of their location is in part due to ODFW attempt to minimize livestock-wolf conflicts. The other part is research. Neither of these require that ranchers have specific locations and I believe that providing them the data would be a serious mistake and a betrayal of the public dollars and trust and set precedent for requests from other interest groups. Ranchers have a responsibility to the public to be out on public lands intensively monitoring and caring for their livestock. The current practice of turning cattle out on public lands into pastures is an antiquated approach that results in impacts to stream and riparian areas, seeps and springs while much of the rest of the forage goes unused. It also results in animals remaining on public lands after they are suppose to be off because of the size of the area and the complexity of the topography which makes it easy for livestock to not be found during the fall. Riders would reduce both conflicts and improve the return numbers of livestock.

As a scientist, wolves are assisting in the recovery of stream-riparian ecosystems and restoring other wildlife balances that have been impacted by their absence. I have personally seen riparian areas that have not livestock on them but have had their willows, cottonwoods, and aspen extensively browsed by elk and deer. As water will become an every pressing issue with increased climate variability, restoring stream-riparian systems, seeps and springs and the overall water holding capacity of our watershed is vital. Wolves play a key role and must be allowed to increase in numbers and distribution. Site-specific location data puts restoration of these systems at risk and elevates livestock grazing to the number one value of public lands rather than just one of many uses.

All of us have to deal with risk. There are steps that ranchers in NE Oregon and elsewhere can take to reduce conflicts. There are steps that public land managers can take to increase the flexibility of ranchers in moving their livestock around on public land. Options exist.

In the end, wolves are important and their presence supported by the public. I urge you to not agree to this request by the ranchers for information but rather encourage them in their continued efforts to use tactics, including increased riders, to protect their livestock while also protecting the investment of the public in wolves and ecosystem restoration.

Respectfully,

Governor Kitzhaber & Director Melcher,

Like most Oregonians I value wolves and other native wildlife. Wolf recovery has the potential to be one of Oregon's greatest conservation success stories. I am pleased that the state has made great strides in recovery, but with just 64 known adult wolves almost entirely confined to the Northeast corner of the state, there is a long way to go.

Killing wolves does nothing to reduce conflict. I urge you to reject proposals to weaken or strip protections for wolves and continue to prioritize science-based conservation, education, and non-lethal conflict prevention.

I also urge you not to consider reckless proposals like the one from the Oregon Cattlemen's Association to release sensitive location data to members of the public. It's dangerous for wolves and sets a terrible precedent.

Oregon has come a long way since trapping, poisoning, and hunting wolves. Please honor Oregon's conservation values and keep wolf recovery on track.

Subject: Sensible Wolf Management Needed

Governor Kitzhaber & Director Melcher,

Now that Oregon wolf populations have reached their "four breeding pairs for three years" requirement, it's time to manage them like any other predator species. Please don't heed the extremists on either side and give in to those who think that there's never enough wolves, nor those who think that one wolf is too many. Wolves have made a comeback and now it's time to manage them in the same way we manage cougars, bears, and coyotes.

Sincerely,

Matt Alford

Subject: Keep Protections for Wolves

Governor Kitzhaber & Director Melcher,

As we have no wolves in NZ through them that is how my love for the German Shephard started and the only dogs I've owned. Wolves to me are treated terribly and are needed on this planet.

Like most Oregonians I value wolves and other native wildlife. Wolf recovery has the potential to be one of Oregon's greatest conservation success stories. I am pleased that the state has made great strides in recovery, but with just 64 known adult wolves almost entirely confined to the Northeast corner of the state, there is a long way to go.

Killing wolves does nothing to reduce conflict. I urge you to reject proposals to weaken or strip protections for wolves and continue to prioritize science-based conservation, education, and non-lethal conflict prevention.

I also urge you not to consider reckless proposals like the one from the Oregon Cattlemen's Association to release sensitive location data to members of the public. It's dangerous for wolves and sets a terrible precedent.

Oregon has come a long way since trapping, poisoning, and hunting wolves. Please honor Oregon's conservation values and keep wolf recovery on track.

Sincerely,

Judy Vernon
Broadhead Ave
Wanganui, ot 4501
