Subject: Strengthen the wolf plan

Having learned that you extended the timeline on the review of Oregon's Wolf Conservation and Management Plan, I am writing to urge you to use this delay as an opportunity to strengthen the Plan. Please incorporate provisions that more closely align with the best available science and the values expressed by a majority of Oregonians who - like me - value wolves and other native wildlife.

As you've seen from the thousands of comments which have been submitted by the public, and critiques from independent scientists, hunting, trapping, and killing wolves is not the way to manage this unique native species or reduce conflict.

The latest iteration of the draft Wolf Plan not only opens the door for future hunting and trapping of wolves, but allows these methods to be used as a management tool now. Phrases like "special permit agents" and "management approach similar to other wildlife in Oregon" are efforts to get a foot in the door towards sport hunting. And it's unacceptable.

I encourage the Commission to ensure that any policies found in the Wolf Plan make killing an option of last resort and prioritize enforceable requirements for implementation of meaningful non-lethal preventative measures.

Oregon also needs to more seriously address the pervasive poaching problem which affects all wildlife in our state, but especially our native carnivores.

Oregonians are counting on you to pass a Wolf Plan that is scientifically defensible and reflects Oregon values of protecting native wildlife for future generations.

Thank you,

Mr. Arran Robertson

We have to live in harmony with nature--if we don't, we're just slowly killing ourselves, along with all the other species, including wolves.

Wolves are a vital link in the web of life on this planet. It's your responsibility to see that they survive and flourish. Ranchers will have to better protect their herds and flocks...don't take it out on the wolves.

Having learned that you extended the timeline on the review of Oregon's Wolf Conservation and Management Plan, I am writing to urge you to use this delay as an opportunity to strengthen the Plan. Please incorporate provisions that more closely align with the best available science and the values expressed by a majority of Oregonians who - like me - value wolves and other native wildlife.

As you've seen from the thousands of comments which have been submitted by the public, and critiques from independent scientists, hunting, trapping, and killing wolves is not the way to manage this unique native species or reduce conflict.

The latest iteration of the draft Wolf Plan not only opens the door for future hunting and trapping of wolves, but allows these methods to be used as a management tool now. Phrases like "special permit agents" and "management approach similar to other wildlife in Oregon" are efforts to get a foot in the door towards sport hunting. And it's unacceptable.

I encourage the Commission to ensure that any policies found in the Wolf Plan make killing an option of last resort and prioritize enforceable requirements for implementation of meaningful non-lethal preventative measures.

Oregon also needs to more seriously address the pervasive poaching problem which affects all wildlife in our state, but especially our native carnivores.

Oregonians are counting on you to pass a Wolf Plan that is scientifically defensible and reflects Oregon values of protecting native wildlife for future generations.

Thank you,

Idaho is not a good example of wildlife management with regards to wolves, several families have lost their dogs to wolf traps and a lawsuit of trap placement both in extremely close proximity and on personal land has been filed in 2016 and 2017. The landowner found these traps just at the time that their kids were curious what they were and were dangerously close to touching them. Chemical poisons as well non baited steel traps are detrimental to wolverines and other recovering wildlife in Oregon. Have some decent reflection on this predicament that an agency trying to destroy wildlife in OR finds itself in. What is the sustainable solution? Does it involve killing the endangered resources we clearly love and are working towards habitating. Is it worth it to our taxpayers to endure an agenda that seems to promote ideas from rebellious out of state "ranchers" like the bundy gang that want to politicize our resources and ruin our tribal culture. Wolves are not vicious predators they mostly eat voles and only pursue big game when they are numerous enough to have a family of more than one generation. Likely opening a hunt on wolves would also open the floodgates for the many to express their distaste with the few in Oregon. Wolf hunters are the few.

The Commission has an opportunity to send a strong conservation message. Until the wolf poaching stops, the wolves get the highest level of protection. Regulations mean nothing if one side decides not to follow them.

Thank you for extending the timeline on the review of Oregon's Wolf Conservation and Management Plan.

I encourage the Commission to ensure that any policies found in the Wolf Plan make killing no longer an option. Period. All poachings should be treated more severely with prison time.

This struggling species is counting on you to pass a Wolf Plan that is scientifically defensible and reflects Oregon values of protecting native wildlife for future generations. If you don't believe me, send a survey to every Oregonian and ask them how they feel about tax-payer dollars being funded to kill wolves when they kill or injure livestock roaming in their territory?

Many of the so-called wolf "degradations" are done on public lands and in wolf territory. It is not fair that a wolf or several members of a pack are being killed (using taxpayer dollars) for doing what is in their nature to do.

How is there a balance - giving cattle (more than 1.5 million in Oregon) preference over wolves (more than 110 known in Oregon)? This is absurd.

Did you know that many wolves die in the wild due to starvation? And now we are requiring them to share their land with a new prey - cattle and other livestock. A wolf doesn't differentiate between a deer/fawn or cow/calf. It's hungry and that is food. We - or I should say the government - has set wolf population up for failure.

The Oregon Cattlemen's Association has made their intention clear: "There is no good wolf." They don't want to share public land, which they believe is their land, with wolves or frankly any prey that interferes with their profit.

They often site how their cattle is skinny because of the stress caused by wolves. You know, my cat is a lot skinnier when I let her roam outside as well.

Please, use common sense politics and stop funding wolf killings because of fear and profit tactics used by Mr. Nash, one of the leaders in the Oregon Cattlemen's Association, and their well-funded lobbyists.

Also, we need to stop funding cattlemen and ranchers for their losses. Going forward they should sign a waiver that if they use public lands, they do so at their own risk, knowing it is wolf, cougar, bear, etc., territory. Losses will no longer be the government's responsibility. It never was nor should it be.

I applaud the government for trying to undo a very horrible wrong committed years ago -- the extermination of wolves that was funded by the government. Shame on our ancestors. Let's not repeat the same mistake.

A good question that has been asked: "Why did we bring the wolves back? Just to kill them all over again?"

You may reach out to me anytime for public comment via text at (503) 908-0808 or kim@beelermarketing.com. I was interviewed on the Lars Larson Show on this topic and on Sunday, Dec. 3rd, Steve Dunn of KATU Channel 2 News offered a good story on the problem on the show: "Your Voice, Your Vote."

Although I am not a resident of Oregon, I agree with all of the points listed above. I live in Northern California, and our recovering wolf population is dependent on a healthy population of wolves in Oregon that are allowed to migrate south. There are better alternatives (cheaper and more effective) to wolf depredation on livestock than allowing hunting, trapping, and poisoning. In addition a rancher grazes his livestock on public lands, he should accept the possibility of wolves preying on his livestock. They are PUBLIC lands, not his private hunting grounds. The wolves are a natural part of the ecosystem, introduced livestock are not.

Officials at ODFW need to grasp the fact that wolves are NOT a threat to ranchers in that a 1,300,000 cattle live in Oregon, and 55,000 cattle die from NON-Predator causes. Cattle deaths due to wolves are less than .015% of deaths. This is NOT a threat to ranchers' livelihood. Check out USDA cattle death statistics to confirm this. Also, ranchers get reimbursement from cattle that are killed by wolves. I owned my own business for 20 years and if I could have had the government back up my losses with reimbursements, that would have been remarkable. Ranchers have chosen to run a private business and therefore should assume the risks of business decisions, especially if they choose to run cattle on public lands where wolves are known to hunt. Most cattle deaths are due to respiratory and digestive tract diseases. Perhaps, improved animal husbandry would improve business losses for ranchers, not killing wolves which are important apex predators needed for a healthy ecosystem. ODFW officials need to pay more attention to their mission statement which is to preserve and protect wildlife and their habitat for Oregon residents to enjoy. Nothing in that mission statement says to trap, poison, or shoot wolves for ranchers.

Oregonians are counting on you to pass a Wolf Plan that is scientifically defensible and reflects Oregon values of protecting native wildlife for future generations. This isn't the way to go. The wolves are still in danger of losing federal protections. If they lose protections, they'll become vulnerable to hunting, and trapping once again. Wildlife "management" has nothing to do with conservation. This proposal won't help wildlife. With not so many wolves remaining in Oregon, this would a step going in the wrong direction. We need a stronger plan for the wolves. Without further action, more wolves will be killed and hunted. Since I value and stand for wolves and wildlife, this is too important to ignore. The future of the wolves are at stake. It's very important to know why our wildlife and wolves need protection.

The problems occurred when the new people invaded America with a worldview reflective of dark stories and fairy tales, void of all science! I am a biologist, former hunting guide and have done wolf research in Montana. I am very opposed to hunting of wolves. There is a growing body of research that suggests social disruption when pack members are indiscriminately removed.

Furthermore, wolves should not be managed to benefit hunters or ranchers. We need wolves on the landscape in full numbers so they can do their "ecological services." This include removal of sick, disease and injured animals.

Right now ODFW is facing the prospect of CWD in Oregon. There is research that having a full complement of predators can reduce the spread of this disease.

The current and proposed plans for wolf management are willfully ignorant of ecological realities regarding wolves and other pinnacle predators' integral connection to ecosystem function and stability. We do not and will never have a predator problem requiring their being hunted, as prey levels will regulate their populations quickly and efficiently. As a small farmer and businessman I can refute the claim predators need to be extirpated. Livestock guard dogs have like my Great Pyrenees have sufficed for millennia in reducing losses by over 90% while allowing for agriculture benefiting from the predators' ecosystem services in regulating pest populations. Chair Finley & Commissioners,

I was troubled to see that Oregon's wolf recovery seems to have stalled out in 2016. Along with recent decreases in protections and the expiration of important enforceable provisions in the state's wolf plan, conflict increased - as science indicated it likely would.

As you consider long-awaited revisions to the Oregon Wolf Plan, please ensure the plan prioritizes conservation, education, and conflict prevention. Killing wolves does not resolve conflict and should truly be an option of last resort.

The revised Wolf Plan should learn from the past by carrying forward parts of the plan that worked in previous phases and fixing those that did not. To succeed, the plan must contain clear, defensible, and enforceable requirements. For instance, the definition of chronic depredation and enforceable requirements for non-lethal measures and transparency should be no less than they were prior to 2015 when the wolf population grew and conflict decreased.

It's also important to remember that as Commissioners, you serve all Oregonians. The majority of Oregonians value native wildlife for their intrinsic value and strongly oppose wolf hunting by any name. Existing provisions in the plan that allow wolf hunting and trapping should be removed.

Oregon's wolf recovery remains tenuous. Wolves play an important role on the landscape and have many positive benefits. Oregon can - and should - do better than neighboring states that have shown killing wolves only increases conflict.

Please consider the voices of all Oregonians.

Thank you.

Commission Chair Finley

Dear Finley,

I want to express my deep disappointment in the latest, weakened version of the Oregon Wolf Plan. It appears that over the last few months, ODFW and the Commission have ignored the feedback of Oregonians who want to see continued protections for wolves. Instead, the plan makes it easier than ever for the state to justify more killing. And the Commission is making it harder for people like me to make our voices heard by preventing public testimony on the issue until January the same day the Commission will vote on the final plan.

While the first draft of the Oregon Wolf Plan unacceptably lowered the bar for killing wolves in response to livestock depredations, this latest version takes things a step further. I was shocked to see a new provision that gives the ODFW Director broad discretion to authorize killing wolves after two confirmed depredations, without any time or place restrictions. This is an untenable standard.

The latest draft also makes it easier to hunt wolves. It creates a special hunting permit so that local residents can do the agency's "lethal removals." It also adds a vision statement that shifts the intent of the state to one day manage wolves like cougars and black bears a euphemism for hunting. It seems the Commission was more concerned with getting a foot in the door for hunting than it was with addressing serious threats like poaching.

In the last month, there have been at least three poaching incidents in Oregon not including the wolf that was shot by an elk hunter in what was reported as self-defense. Yet, this plan fails to meaningfully address this issue. There is no strategy to coordinate with enforcement agencies or to close loopholes in our existing wildlife laws. This sends a powerful and dangerous message about how little the state values its imperiled species.

As it's written today, the draft Oregon Wolf Plan fails wolves and the majority of Oregonians who wish to see them recover.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Ashby Remley

Subject: Protect Oregon's wolves and salmon for all Oregonians

Dear Commissioners,

I am writing to express my deep concern over recent actions by the Commission and the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife (ODFW). I am strongly opposed to any form of wolf hunting or trapping in our state, and I am strongly opposed to any delay in the implementation of the compromise agreement to phase-out the use of gillnets on the Columbia River.

During the Commission's debate to strip Endangered Species Act protections from Oregon's tiny population of less than 100 wolves, several of you noted that the decision would not automatically lead to wolf hunting. Now, just over a year later, staff with ODFW are proposing changes to the Wolf Conservation and Management Plan that would in fact do exactly what you said would not happen--allow hunting and trapping in our state.

I ask you to oppose hunting and trapping of wolves in Oregon in any form, and reject any request by ODFW to erode protections that make it easier to kill wolves. n. Additionally, I encourage you to adopt a plan that has strong sideboards to determine when and how ODFW is allowed to take lethal action.

I am also deeply disturbed by the decision the Commission made last fall to abandon the 2012 compromise agreement to phase out the use of gillnets by non-tribal commercial fishing operations on the Lower Columbia River. Later this month, you will have an opportunity to revisit this decision. Washington is moving ahead with these reforms, and Oregon should do the same. The compromise resolved decades of conflict over gillnets, and it would be deeply irresponsible for the Commission to blow up the agreement.

The Commission is supposed to represent the interests of all Oregonians, not just those who hunt and fish. I urge you to honor your commitment to do so, and oppose any proposal to allow hunting and trapping of wolves, or keep wildlife-killing gillnets on the Lower Columbia River.

Let's start the year off on the right foot.

Sincerely,

Sheryl Skoglund

Subject: Support protections for wolves

Dear Chair Finley and Commissioners:

I'm writing to encourage you to support strengthened protections for Oregon's wolves in the next five-year Oregon Wolf Plan. It appears that past success on wolf recovery in Oregon may now have stalled. Only strengthening Oregon's plan can ensure continued success. Successful wolf recovery is what most Oregonians want.

First, the Department must remain in charge of depredation investigations. The widely reviled Wildlife Services is a rogue federal agency that has shown in the past it is not capable of this job in Oregon. These critical investigations must be unbiased and based upon clear evidence. ODFW is the best agency for the task.

Second, I strongly oppose killing wolves in response to conflicts with deer and elk. Wolves are wild animals, and ungulates are their natural prey. Despite some local impacts, there is simply no justification for killing wolves for their tiny impact on the state's ungulate herds. Selling more deer and elk tags is not a justification for killing wolves.

Next, the Commission must maintain provisions that require non-lethal measures be used to deter wolf-livestock conflict prior to lethal control. The Oregon model is working. Simple and common sense changes to outdated ranching practices prevent most depredations. This requirement provides clarity to both the public and ranchers. These preventative measures are critical for wolves, and must not be weakened now.

Finally, I, like the vast majority of Oregonians, I do not support a wolf-hunting or trapping season now or at any point in the future. There should be no unnatural caps on wolf numbers. This type of management is inappropriate for wolves in our state and it has not worked in states where it has been tried. Protecting wolves from hunting is critical to maintaining pack structure and to demonstrating tolerance for this majestic animal.

Thank you for considering my comments during the five-year review process. Citizens

Sincerely,

Mrs. MaryLynn Michaelis

Subject: Oregon's Wolf Plan Should Protect Wolves

Dear Commissioners,

I'm writing to advocate for specific priorities in the revision of Oregon's Wolf Conservation and Management Plan. Wolves often bear the brunt of special-interest politics -- but the state's wolves belong to all Oregonians, not just those who find it inconvenient to live with big wildlife. The department's 2016 annual wolf report shows a population increase of just two wolves since 2015 and a decrease in packs and breeding pairs. This concerns me greatly and highlights the need to increase protections under the wolf plan.

Science increasingly tells us that killing wolves harms pack social structure, cohesiveness, reproduction and pup survival. It also increases risk of conflicts with livestock and levels of poaching. The science comparing lethal and nonlethal methods of conflict deterrence has also shown that nonlethal measures are more effective and less costly over the long haul than simply killing wolves and other native predators. Revisions to Oregon's wolf plan should acknowledge this science and shift the plan away from killing wolves.

Specifically, I urge you to focus on the following five areas when making revisions:

- 1) The plan should maintain a wolf-conservation focus and should not make wolves a scapegoat for declines in elk or deer. The current plan says wolves can be killed if they are "the cause" for wild ungulate declines; the proposed revisions say wolves need only be "a significant factor." This greatly reduces protections for wolves. Also, the proposed plan allows wolves to be killed if they cause elk herds to decline at artificial elk-feeding stations. Those stations bait wolves in, and it's outrageous that the state would kill wolves for being drawn to a natural prey species.
- 2) The revised plan should preserve those parts from Phase I that have proved beneficial for all parties and include them in Phase II and III. This includes clarity, transparency, accountability and enforceable requirements for the department and livestock operators before killing wolves can be considered.
- 3) No hunting or trapping of wolves should be allowed in Oregon, except for live trapping by state or federal biologists to fasten collars. Most Oregonians don't want wolves killed, since current science shows that killing wolves increases the risk for conflict, reduces social tolerance for wolves, and increases poaching. But especially, wolves shouldn't be hunted or trapped by members of the public -- it incentivizes conflict, is ripe for abuse, and is a "foot in the door" for general wolf hunting and trapping seasons.

4) The threshold for considering killing wolves for chronic livestock depredations should be higher on public lands than on private lands. The state holds wolves as a public trust and should not be killing our wolves on public lands to benefit a private, for-profit industry that uses these lands at a tremendous discount and is eligible for compensation for wolf-caused losses.

5) Finally, the plan should not count "probable" wolf-caused losses toward a wolf-kill order since there's no scientific evidence it will result in fewer conflicts; it shouldn't allow USDA's Wildlife Services to be involved in wolf-depredation investigations since this rogue agency routinely confirms depredations when the department did not find sufficient evidence; it shouldn't allow involvement of local elected officials in making depredation decisions because such consequential decisions should be divorced from local politics, pressure and personal relationships; and the plan should not create management zones and wolf population caps when it's well known that wolves are self-regulating.

Thank you for carefully considering my input.

Jean Patricia

RE: Oregon's wolf plan must make it easier to coexist than kill

null

In order for wolves to have a future in Oregon, they cannot be hunted and killed. Making it easier to justify wolf killing in cases of conflict is a step in the wrong direction. Instead, it is important to encourage non-lethal solutions and peaceful coexistence with wolves wherever possible. With only 137 known wolves in the state, every individual is vital to the conservation of the species. I strongly urge you not to change wolf management practices in Oregon to make wolf killing easier.

Sincerely,
Kate O'Donnell
